Reliance on Information Posted

The information presented on or through the Interface is made available solely for general information purposes. We do not warrant the accuracy, completeness or usefulness of this information. Any reliance you place on such information is strictly at your own risk. We disclaim all liability and responsibility arising from any reliance placed on such materials by you or any other visitor to the Interface, or by anyone who may be informed of any of its contents.

In addition, retirement balance and monthly income amounts presented on or through the Interface are hypothetical estimates also provided solely for general information purposes and do not reflect actual investments or investment results and are not guarantees of future results. You should not rely on the Interface as the primary basis for your financial or tax planning decisions. Please consult your tax advisor or financial advisor regarding such decisions. The Company cannot guarantee or assure your ability to meet any of your goals or that any hypothetical results will actually occur. The Interface simply uses your information and certain assumptions detailed below to provide an estimate of the amounts presented. Information you may provide includes starting age, current salary, current 401(k) balance, and current outside assets, including other investments or retirement plans.

The Estimated Total Accumulation at Retirement (“ETAR”) calculation includes estimates of both 401(k) balance and outside balances, if provided. Unless otherwise noted or adjusted by you, the ETAR calculations made by the Interface assume a retirement age of 65, an annual salary increase of 1.5%, an annual 401(k) contribution rate of 3.0%, and annual market performance ranging from 4.0% to 6.0%, depending on your risk profile as determined by completing the questionnaire on the Interface. The annual contribution is applied as a lump sum at the end of each calendar year. Projected market performance of your account is compounded annually. The Estimated Monthly Income (“EMI”) calculation represents a monthly retirement income estimate utilizing a 4.0% annual draw taken monthly from the ETAR, as well as an estimate of monthly social security benefits, assuming no spousal benefits. The estimated social security benefits are calculated utilizing the 35 years in which you earned the most, based off your current salary provided and the salary increase projections detailed above. If you are less than 35 years from retirement when the calculation is completed, the algorithm takes the current salary provided and reduces it by 1.5% annually until 35 years of salary data are available. This data is utilized to calculate an average monthly income (“SSMI”) across the 35 year period, which is then applied in the following manner to determine your monthly social security benefit in retirement: you are estimated to receive (i) 90% of the first $826.00 of the SSMI; (ii) 32% of the SSMI that falls between $826.00 and $4,980.00; and (iii) 15% of the SSMI greater than $4980.00. The social security benefit estimate is intended only as an approximation of the actual calculations utilized by the Social Security Administration, which may change from time to time.

Assumptions about projected investment returns, inflation, as well as the data that you may provide, such as current salary and outside assets, are inherently uncertain and introduce uncertainty in the calculations that the tool performs. Even small changes in these inputs and assumptions may have a significant impact on the tools' derived results. The types of compensation paid to you by your employer that you may elect to defer will be defined in your plan document; that definition may include or exclude certain items. Your employer may elect to state in the plan document a maximum percentage of your compensation that you may defer. In addition, the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended contains dollar limitations on the amount of compensation (as defined in the plan document) that may be used to determine benefits, including for purposes of determining how much you can defer. The amount of compensation you may defer will depend on your actual compensation (as defined in the plan document). Actual social security benefits can vary widely depending on changes in the underlying data, including actual income earned before retirement. Additionally, choosing to take social security benefits early or late may materially decrease or increase your actual benefits, respectively.
